

An Introduction to Mosaic and the World-wide Web

Paul S. Wang
Institute for Computational Mathematics
Department of Mathematics and Computer Science
Kent State University
Kent, OH 44242-0001 USA

ABSTRACT

Concepts, background, and usage related to the popular Internet information system known as the World-wide Web are explained. Access to the WWW using the client xmosaic is described. A guide to put information on the Web is given. This document should help users take advantage of instant availability of vast amounts of useful information as well as easy dissemination of results on the Internet.